CURB NUMBERING PLAN CONSIDERED

Last Monday evening at the regular meeting of the City Council, all members being present and Mayor H. H. Smith presiding, a communication was received from Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, stating that they were aware of a movement by certain local individuals to relieve a certain amount of unemployment by organizing a drive, or soliciting residents of Daly City desiring to have their street numbers placed on curbs or other objects for a certain fee. This organization, the communication announced, is on record as endorsing this movement, providing the giving of employment shall be confined to residents of Daly City. Old Glory Post, Veterans of Foriegn Wars, also went on record as being in favor of this movement. This work will be handled by the two local organizations.

A communication was received from City Engineer George Kneese, saying that, after examination of the protests which were filed against the proceedings for water supply system, water storage and water distribution, fire alarm system, etc., it was found that more than one-half of the residents of the area were opposed to the proposition. Therefore the proceedings have been abandoned.

The California State Automobile Association advised the Council that within the next few days they would look into and study the School and Mission street intersection problem, and try to work out some kind of a plan whereby traffic congestion would be relieved at this point.

The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company asked permission to remove and renew certain manhole castings on certain streets. Permission was granted, and the supervision of the same will be under the direction of the superintendent of streets.

A communication was received from various Daly City barber shops, requesting a reduction in the fee for yearly license when a shop has only one chair. This request was referred to the ordinance committee for consideration.

It was reported that the telephone company is looking into the request recently made that a collection office be established in Daly City, during certain days of the month, and that the City Council will have an answer by the next meeting night.

The monthly bills were read and ordered paid.

THEATRE MANAGER ENTERTAINS SCOUTS

Last Friday evening the Scouts and Cubs of Daly City were given a real treat through the courtesy of Mr. Jerry Covel, manager of the Daly City Theatre. The evening was devoted to the entertainment of the Scouts and featured the showing of motion pictures taken in Daly City during the past year. One particular reel showed the Boy Scouts' tree planting at the municipal waterworks last February 22. Mr. Covel had prepared a very fine program, showing "Fireman, Save My Child," which pleased the youngsters. Toby with his Ad-Show also made a hit with the youngsters. The district committee, through their chairman, Mr. Arthur J. Bodien, wishes to extend their thanks to Mr. Covel for his kindness in making the Boy Scouts night possible.

On Saturday, June 25, Fred Collins, H. A. McHugh and Ed Heims visited the Boy Scout camp near Cazadero, known as Camp Royaneh. This summer camp is ideally situated among the tall redwood trees, with a natural watershed and drainage that adds greatly to the healthful atmosphere manifested by the Scouts at the camp. It was stated that 350 Scouts were in attendance at the camp, which is superintended by Scout officials from the San Francisco Area Council. Upon entering the grounds one is impressed with the efficiency displayed by the Scouts in charge of the road. Cars are allowed only to travel the road from the gate to the headquarters under control, which is accomplished by the youngsters with the aid of a telephone system.

Visitors are always welcome, and upon request are supplied with a Scout guide to accompany them on their tour of inspection. The camp is fully equipped, with a large mess hall, where well cooked meals are served. Sleeping quarters are distributed throughout the grove, with each patrol having its own camp fire. Each patrol is responsible for the cleaning of their locations and in this manner the entire camp is spick and span. Shower baths and latrines are conveniently located, adding to the comfort of camp life. A camp hospital, with two prominent doctors in charge, is available at all hours. Educational programs are part of the routine, and schools featuring any particular subject studied by the Scouts have been established. A postoffice and community bank, where each boy deposits his money, with the privilege of withdrawing 15 cents per day for candy or ice cream, is one of the main attractions.

The guide takes great pride in pointing out the collection of animals, snakes and plant life which is on display, with cards designating the proper name of each. The guide sorrowfully infomed us that they had captured a skunk, which was affectionately known as Josephine, but some person had permitted it to escape. It is hoped that next year our Scouts from Daly City will have the opportunity of spending two weeks at this wonderful camp.

COLMA FIREMEN GET HONOR BADGE

The banquet given by the members of the Colma Volunteer Fire Department last Saturday night, June 25, was a huge success. A most delicious chicken and ravioli dinner, prepared by Mr. Pete Valenti was served to the members of the Colma department and Company No. 6. All the members who had been in the department at least five years were given honorary membership badges. The members present who received badges were: Messrs. Jack Callan, Albert Silicani, Robert Herringa, Geno Benedetti and Eugene Graziani. Messrs. James Casey and David Arata were not present, but will receive their badges later. The banquet was not only held for the presentation of the badges, but also for the observance of the seventh anniversary of the department. Mr. Shade, president of the San Mateo County Firemen's Association, was master of ceremonies. A visitor, Mr. Strohm, gave an interesting talk on the high pressure system of the San Francisco Fire Department. The speakers of the Colma department were Fire Chief George Feretti and Past Chief George Wright. Company No. 6 was represented by Captain Antone Gaggero, Lieutenant Leo Kusber, George Volkman and Fire Commissioner Pete Benassini. A most enjoyable evening was had by all present.

Mother Minerva Enjoys Auto Ride on Birthday

Mother Minerva Hartman, Colma's veteran war nurse, celebrated her 100th birthday anniversary last Sunday by locking up her home on stilts and going out. She astonished her neighbors by taking an automobile ride to some place or other, just where she refused to say.

Mother Minerva is known to dislike the motor car, so when one drew up to her door to take her out, the neighbors were nearly overcome with surprise. The veteran nurse has seen active service in the Civil, Indian and Spanish-American wars.

PEA PICKERS WAGE WAR ON COASTSIDE

As the result of race riots, one man is in the Community hospital and four others are in the county jail, following a battle at Arleta Park, just south of Half Moon Bay, last Sunday night.

It is alleged that a miniature battle started when a crowd of Mexican pea pickers demanded their wages from Filipino employers.

The riot, according to authorities, grew out of an argument started when Gene Escaler, "padrone" who contracts pea picking, refused to pay Ysidro Martinez and M. B. Martinez, his father, both of San Jose. The men said they had approximately $12 each coming for a week's work and wished to go home.

Partisans of both sides in a milling throng with weapons flying took part in the melee.

Escaler was arrested by Constable Simmons, of Half Moon Bay, and charged with assault with a deadly weapon. Frank Edralin, a Filipino, was held for investigation. Both men were taken to the county jail at Redwood City to prevent further hostilities, officials said.

Ysidro Martinez was found shot in the hip. He was removed to the Community hospital, where his condition was reported as serious. His father was cut under the eye with a meat cleaer. S. A. Gonzales had his nose broken by a hammer. They were treated by Dr. Borly, of Half Moon Bay.

The battle was the second race riot on the coast this season. A month ago a serious battle resulted over wage disputes. It embroiled all sections of the district and extended into San Mateo when a Filipino boss abandoned a truck load of Mexicans at Half Moon Bay, telling them to walk to their homes in Stockton.

Deaf Mute is Denied Permit to Drive Car

Frederick Buenzie, of Los Altos, a deaf mute, according to traffic officers courted a shower of police bullets when he drove in the third lane of traffic on the Bayshore highway and failed to heed the police siren, one day last week.

Justice E. J. Farrel, South San Francisco, in whose court Buenzie was cited, said he would suspend the mute's driving license indefintely. Meanwhile, said the court, an investigation will be launched to discover how Buenzie acquired the license. The man was stopped, police said, when he speeded down the middle of the highway and refused to give way to traffic from the opposite direction.

Long Gas War is Over; Gasoline Price Goes Up!

Gasoline prices on the Peninsula jumped two and a half cents last Monday, following the advance of 25 cents a barrel in the price of crude oil. All major companies participated in the increase.

The two and a half-cent jump brings the standard price of straight gasoline up to 18 cents, where it was before the disastrous price war of a year ago. Ethyl gasoline went up to 21 cents the gallon with the new increase.

NINE INJURED IN WEEK END CRASH

Nine persons are suffering from injuries received in San Mateo county traffic accidents over the week end.

Smith, continued her success along the tennis line by winning her way into the semi-finals of the national girls' hard court doubles with Miss Edna Connell, of San Francisco, as a partner. In the semi-finals, Miss Smith and her partner were finally eliminated by Gracyn Wheeler, the national girls' champion, and Mary Callander, being defeated by the scores of 6-3, 6-4.

Irene has made a fine showing in tenins, having won the championship at Jefferson Union high school consecutively for four yoers, and at the San Mateo Junior College every year but one. Tennis is a hobby with Irene, but she has had no lessons to help her. Watch her go next September, when she will enter the California championship contest. Her many friends in this community wish her every success, and hope to see her name published as the winner in the state championship match.

WOULD COMBINE ROAD DISTRICTS

San Mateo county's system of five road districts, blamed for bringing about duplication of overhead, conflict of authority, lack of co-ordination and obstacles to efficiency, will be done away with if the new county charter is adopted, it is claimed.

This was seen in the unanimous decision of the county freeholder board, declaring for a single road district to cover the county. Five road supervisors and five sets of road machinery as at present maintained, would be supplanted by unified control under the office of the county engineer, and long complained of tangles in the road situation would be wiped out, is was pointed out.

Decision to provide in the new charter for construction and maintenance of roads by the county engineer and to remove all road control from the board of supervisors, was voted by the charter board at its meeting last week in Redwood City.

Other charter clauses adopted are one specifying that the district attorney serve as public administrator, that the office of county school superintendent remain elective, and that the county sealer of weights and measures be appointed by the chief executive.

At a previous meeting the board decided that the office of surveyor be termed county surveyor-engineer, and this office would be appointive, by the chief executive, the appointment to be confirmed by the board of supervisors.

The motion to make the sealer of weights appointive was carried by one dissenting vote.

On recommendation of the public welfare committee, the board decided the office of school superintendent be elective.

On a majority vote it was decided to provide that the chief executive be appointed and removed by a four-fifths vote of the supervisors.

All constables to be provided for in the charter will be appointed by the sheriff and be ex-officio deputy sheriffs. Fees collected by them will go to the county.

James B. Howell, chairman of the freeholders board, was instructed to release the following statement: "We ask the co-operation of all citizens, groups and organizations of the county by appealing to them to withhold any action or criticism until our board has completed and decided upon recommendations which should be incorporated in the charter.

"It is our belief that our group will have reached tentative decisions in the early part of July. Then during the month of July we will be more than happy to devote our meetings for public hearings, when all citizens' groups and organizations will have an opportunity to present their opinions.

"We ask all citizens' groups, all organizations interested in presenting any information to us, to address a letter to our secretary at our headquarters in the Benjamin Franklin hotel, and we in turn will make plans for hearings."

The charter must be completed by September 9. It will be submitted to the electorate at the general election on November 8.

Gas Heater Deaths Suit is Settled for $7,500

Damage suits for more than $100,000 growing out of three San Bruno "gas heater deaths" more than six months ago will be settled for $7,500, if the Superior court allows compromise petitions filed last week.

Mrs. Alice E. Cole and her son, Charles E. Cole, and her brother, Clarence E. Bennett, died from the fumes of a faulty gas heater in the Bennett home in San Bruno. A coroner's jury held the Union Furniture Company of San Francisco, which installed the heater, guilty of criminal negligence. Ezra Cole, husband of the dead woman, and Florence Fleming, sister of Bennett, filed suit for $75,000 and $25,000, respectively.

The petitions said that the furniture company had agreed to settle both suits for $7,500, which was satisfactory to the plaintiffs.

PEOPLE TO HONOR FATHER OF NATION

If George Washington were to ride through this country today, it is safe to say that, no matter in what city, town or village he might stop and hitch his horse, he would find Ma putting on her bonnet, Pa dusting off the car seat, and Johnny tying up the dog, to join the rest of the citizens in a community celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of his birth.

American's day of all days this year belongs to George Washington. Clear across America, the mountains, the plains and the shores are literally ringing today with praises of the great American whose bicentennial is being celebrated this year with a vigor and patriotism unsurpassed in the history of our country.

More than 40,000 towns and cities have sent in reports to the headquarters of the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission of local bicentennial committees which have made definite plans for this day. And plans are going forward with increasing enthusiasm for the remainder of the bicentennial celebration—until Thanksgiving day, the day on which the celebration officially closes.

On the anniversary of the proclamation of American independence, the bicentennial celebration of the birth of the man who more than any other made that independence a fact reaches a high point. There is scarcely a civilized country today where there is not some observance of the hundred and fifty-sixth glorious Fourth of July. And, according to reports pouring into the headquarters of the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, these honors all take the form of a tribute to George Washington.

The celebrations will extend to all Army posts, National Guard units, Naval bases, etc., throughout the country. In New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut and the other New England states and down the eastern seaboard all the way to Florida, there will be Colonial cavalcades, with fifers and drummers, marching in Continental uniforms through the historic streets of their cities and towns.

Many cities have chosen this day as particularly appropriate for unveiling of monuments to the Father of our country. Richmond, Virginia; Salt Lake City, Utah; Seattle, Washington; Portland, Oregon; Boston, Massachusetts; and Cleveland, Ohio, will all hold such ceremonies on the Fourth of July.

Probably the most outstanding local celebration in the whole country will be the dedication of the restored Fort Necessity at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. However, New York City, Kansas City, Missouri, and Washington, D. C., have also planned unusually impressive celebrations, beginning the day with the firing of salutes, ringing of bells, and ending it with a display of fireworks.

It has always been a practice for every American embassy, legation and consulate to observe the Fourth of July at their posts in every part of the world. This year they are giving these observances a decidedly bicentennial flavor and for the past months the diplomatic mail pouches have contained helps and hints from the United States Commission for these celebrations so that other nations may know how America honors her greatest.

Many foreign cities are planning their own tributes. In Budapest, Hungary, they are planting a tree near Washington's statue. In Dresden, Germany, there is being held a special Fourth of July performance at the Albert Theatre in George Washington's honor, and Italy is inaugurating a series of lectures at the Royal Italian University for Foreigners in Perugia to celebrate the bicentennial, with Foreign Minister Grandi officiating. Sweden, Japan, Canada, and others also informed the Federal Commission of plans for festivities.

One hundred and fifty-six years ago George Washington struggled unheralded with his rabble army for the greatest stakes history has ever known. He was fighting to make a great people free and independent. The world, if it thought of him at all, laughed at the foolishness of the unequal struggle. Today, uncounted millions of citizens of the country he fought for and fathered are paying him homage, and foreign countries pause to join in this great tribute.

Shriners Are Planning Display of Hospitality

To the tune of "Shriners, You're Welcome, Make Yourself at Home," San Franciscans are preparing to play host to several hundred Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, their wives and families, and many other visitors who will flock to the City by the Golden Gate, July 26, 27 and 28, for one of the nation's merriest parties.

Completely ignoring the depression, San Francisco Shriners are planning one of the most lavish displays of hospitality ever enjoyed at a convention of this sort.

A variety of amusement has been planned. Foremost are the great spectacles, four in all, that will parade at night and day during the three day session.

The Shrine "Mardi Gras" of industry, representing California counties and cities, the nation's mighty industries and nations of foreign lands, will be staged on the second day of the convention. It will be preceded by the grand opening Shrine parade on the 26th. Then there will be the Shrine night parade, when uniformed bodies from Temples throughout America will march, with novel electrical effects adding to the brilliancy of the event.

And climaxing in its grandeur the thrills of the convention, will come the Hollywood electrical motion picture pageant and reception to the stars. Headed by Harold Lloyd as grand marshal, the parade will feature most of the moving picture world's popular stars.

When Martin Mannigan of Rochester, N. Y., forgot his key and could get no response to his knock, he called the firemen who got in a second story window and found Mrs. Mannigan asleep.

ROLLICKING ROMPERS VISIT RUSSIAN RIVER

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Collins and little Jerry Collins, with Mr. and Mrs. Edmond Heim and daughter Lorraine Heim, spent a delightful two weeks vacation at North View, their summer cottage located on the Russian river, near Monte Rio.

During their stay at Monte Rio, the Heim's and Collins' were hosts to many members of the Rollicking Rompers, extending real hospitality to all visitors from Daly City. Through their courtesy, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McHugh and children enjoyed the week end at North View.

Last Sunday was declared "Rollicking Rompers' Day," and elaborate preparations were made well in advance of the arrival of the auto caravan from Daly City, carrying many of our prominent citizens, who had previously planned to stage an outing at Sandy Beach.

Mrs. Josephine Heim, an expert baker and exponent of the culinary art, busied herself baking dozens of "old-fashioned scones," and prepared a large Virginia baked ham that was seasoned and decorated in true Southern style. Our "Personality Man," Fred Collins, officiated as second cook, taking charge of the pantry, and turned out large platters of beautifully decorated salads that were used to appease the appetites of the hungry. Rompers. Ed Heim was kept busy applying his famous mixture of "Geezer" to Fred Collins' sunburn, which only caused Fred's million dollar "smile" to broaden.

While at Monte Rio, Mrs. Josephine Heim was runner-up in a popularity contest and held the lead until last Saturday evening, only to be nosed out by a chicken from Petaluma. Mrs. Charlotte Collins proved to be the champion Bingo player and as a result of her skill was considered to be a detriment to the success of the business. After her winning streak, the proprietor decided to announce the game was temporarily discontinued, while he replenished his stock.

Ed Heim annexed a new title for himself, and as a result of a mysterious experience, the natives of Monte Rio called him the "Miracle Man." It seems that while Ed was enjoying a swim in the Russian river, and after crossing the stream, was noticed by the life-guard to be returning to the beach with full steam ahead. Arriving out of breath and quite excited, Ed related a weird tale about discovering a "cold spot" in the center of the river, which caused his muscles to expand, and upon reaching warmer water his muscles contracted. This statement appears quite unbelievable and in direct violation of the laws of nature. It also does not agree with Einstein's theory of evolution. However, Ed created considerable excitement at Sandy Beach, causing several of the "old-timers" to immediately go out in search of this "cold spot." A party consisting of A. J. Bodien, Roy Johnston, Charlie Williamson, H. A. McHugh and Fred Collins spent several hours combing the river for this "spot," but failed to locate it.

Al Mordin made a very favorable impression upon the bathing beauties of Sandy Beach with his song "Down on the Farm," and was called upon for many encores. He also performed a remarkable feat of tight-rope walking and daring by crossing a trestle Saturday evening without the aid of a search-light. Spots gave a fine interpretation of hog calling, and from the heights of a lofty redwood crooned his "Indian Love Call," which was immediately recognized by Fred Collins.

Those enjoying the outing last week end were: Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Bodien, accompanied by Walter, Eleanor and Dee; Mr. and Mrs. Al Mordin and daughter Bubbles, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Johnston and sons, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McHugh and children, Mr. and Mrs. John Cosbie and son, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Collins and Jerry, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Heim and daughter Lorraine, Spots, Butch and Caroline Kavorik.

A Glee Club was also formed under the direction of Mrs. Loretta Johnston, and also a Dramatic section, under the direction of Miss Marion Millet.

After the business had been concluded, dainty refreshments were served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Marie Arata.

Those present were: Miss Louise Segale, Miss Helen Nation, Miss Julia Nation, Mrs. Agnes Denning, Mrs. Ida Forest, Mrs. Margaret Pettigrew, Mrs. Germaine Greene, Mrs. Grace Bacciagaluppi, Mrs. Julia Johnston, organist; Mrs. Sue Cullen, Mrs. Loretta Johnson, Mrs. Marie Arata, Mrs. Helen Rode, Miss Mary Nolan, Miss Francis Spain, Mrs. Marie Lowe and Miss Marion Millet.

Two Men Injured on the Bayshore by Hit-Runner

A hit-runner is being sought by San Mateo police as the result of an accident on the Bayshore highway, San Mateo, in which two men narrowly escaped death. The hit-runner, driving north, side-swiped an automobile driven south by Alfred Newland, of Naglee street, San Francisco, police were told.

The Newland automobile was overturned, pinning its two occupants underneath. It immediately burst into flames. Passing motorists extricated the men before the fire reached them. The San Mateo fire department put out the blaze.

Newland, an employee of the San Francisco water department, was treated at Mills Memorial hospital for a lacerated scalp. Frank Miley, 169 Naglee street, his passenger, escaped with minor cuts and bruises.

The driver of the other automobile could not be located by police. He apparently failed to halt following the accident.

TWO INJURED IN CRASH

Louis Kienietz, of Palo Alto, is in the hospital suffering from serious injuries following an automobile crash at Dumbarton bridge and Bayshore highway, near Ravenswood. According to reports of officers, Kienietz's car and one driven by Rocco Matteucci, of San Francisco, collided. Thomas Ehrman, of Atherton, was slightly injured when his car struck a pole in Atherton.

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

More than 3300 boxes of fresh grapefruit were shipped from San Francisco to England during the week ended June 11, according to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Automobile traffic into California continues to increase, records of the California Department of Agriculture show. During the month ending May 22,405 cars entered the Shasta-Cascade wonderland, while those entering the Redwood Empire totaled 6530. Central California recorded more than 18,000 while southern California showed 22,775.

Two bridge and grading contracts on the scenic San Simeon-Carmel highway between Cambria and San Simeon, San Luis Obispo County, were awarded at a cost of $207,210. Contract for grading a nine mile stretch was awarded to the Granite Construction Company of Watsonville, at $144,687. Two steel bridges along the same route, costing $63,223, will be built by J. W. Terrell, Sacramento.

The practice of city and county officials in using a rubber stamp is legal, but the practice should be discouraged. This opinion was handed down by Attorney General U. S. Webb in response to an inquiry from State Comptroller Ray L. Riley, according to reports. The attorney general ruled that a rubber stamp which has been adopted by an official as his signature is legal, but the practice should be discouraged.

The Pacific Electric Railway has been granted authority by the State Railroad Commission to operate motor coach service into North Los Angeles (the old Zelzah district) from Hollywood. The bus service on Ventura Boulevard, from Reseda Boulevard to Girard, will be discontinued. The new route from Hollywood will run on Ventura Boulevard to Reseda Boulevard, thence north through Reseda to North Los Angeles. Such a bus service has been sought for several years.

The Sonoma County Corporation barn at El Verano was destroyed by fire recently with a loss estimated at $20,000. The building was used for storage of road equipment for that section of the county, some of which was lost. The fire started in dry grass between the garage and the Bellevue Hotel. The explosion of five barrels of oil and tar added to the excitement. Fire fighting equipment from all over the county kept the flames from the hotel and the adjoining residence of F. Silva.

A typical California girl to officially represent the state at the opening of the 1933 World's Fair in Chicago is to be selected at the State Fair in Sacramento next September. Each of the fifty-eight counties of the state will be invited to enter a contestant, the state fair board announced. One of the girls will be selected to go to the world's fair as "Miss California." Her expenses to the eastern city and return will be paid by the World's Fair Commission of California. The method of selection at the state fair will be decided later but it is believed Governor Rolph will take part in the choosing of the winner.

The apricot growers' department of the Ventura County Farm Bureau met recently to consider the rates to pay for the harvesting and drying of apricots during the season. Rates recommended to apricot growers were ten cents per fifty-pound box for picking, and $1.50 per day, for a nine-hour day, for shed and yard labor. These rates were arrived at by determining all the costs involved in harvesting and drying, and the probable price for the product during the season. Even at the rate set, according to the bureau's apricot growers' committee, the grower will barely pay costs of harvesting and drying, without any left over to pay for his cultural operation costs.

San Francisco is a good town for babies. Statistics compiled by the United States Bureau of the Census for 1931, and issued by Dr. J. C. Geiger, City Health Officer, show San Francisco to have the lowest baby death rate of thirteen of the principal cities in the United States. The San Francisco rate is 41.6 per 1000. The average death rate for babies of the thirteen cities is 59.7, San Francisco's rate being 18.1 per 1000 below the average. However, the same compilation shows that the stork has fallen down on the job in San Francisco, 1931 showing only twelve babies per 1000 persons having been born during that period. Baltimore is listed as the country's baby center, the birth rate there being 74.5 babies per 1000 of population.

With summer fire regulations for visitors to national and State forests now in effect, Regional Forester Snow has issued an appeal to the public for extreme care in woodland areas. The plea goes also to auto drivers who forgetfully or carelessly drop lighted matches or smoking matter.

Adequate provision for child health protection will be demanded at the next Legislature, Dr. Giles S. Porter, state health director, announced in reporting that all appropriations have been exhausted.

The former Coast Guard cutter Bear, re-christened the Bear of Oakland for her proposed trip to the Antarctic with Rear-Admiral Richard E. Byrd, sailed recently for Boston, where she will be refitted for the trip.

The original list of more than 200 suggested sites for the Southern California prison for first offenders has been boiled down to eleven which State engineers are studying for soil, water and climatic conditions. These eleven sites are in San Diego, Orange, Los Angeles, San Bernardino and Riverside counties. It is epected the engineers will complete their studies within three weeks so final selection can be made and work started this year. The Legislature provided $375,000 for purchase of land and construction of the first unit of the new prison to which would be committed youths who, upon conviction of a felonly, are now sent to a reform school or San Quentin Penitentiary.

The Interstate Commerce Commission recently ordered railroads serving the Pacific Northwest to reduce freight rates on all deciduous fruits except apples, placing them on the same rate level with California. The apple rate of $1.50 per 100 pounds from the Northwest to Eastern destinations was found to be reasonable, as were all rates from California to the same destinations. The maximum rate of $1.87½ per 100 pounds on fruits other than apples from Washington, Oregon and Northern Idaho was found to be excessive and the railroads were directed to lower it to $1.73, the same rate as now applies to California fruit of the same type. The case has been before the commission at various times since 1925. It was submitted for decision the last time on March 4, 1931. It also has been before the Supreme Court.

The California State Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the legislative act which requires each judgeship in each county to be designated as a separate office. Municipal Judge George J. Steiger, Jr., of San Francisco and Francis D. Adams of Los Angeles attacked the law by asking a writ of mandate against the registrars of voters in their respective cities, compelling them to accept their candidacies for the superior bench, although neither specified for which office of superior judge he wished to run. The supreme court held that Steiger and Adams apparently were confused in the use of the terms "judges" and "court," according to reports. The court said: "A court is one entirety of which there are several judges, and the Legislature having been given power to designate the number of judges constituting the court in each county, there seems no reason why it may not enact reasonable procedure as it sees fit for the election of the several judges."

The Division of Corporations has found it necessary to divide California into districts in order to halt usurious practices by unlicensed personal property brokers. This announcement was made recently by Edwin M. Daugherty, Commissioner of Corporations. He added that field men are already working in various districts under instructions to ferret out, if necessary, all unlicensed brokers. The Supreme Court recently upheld the authority of the commissioner to supervise the business of personal property brokers and declared it mandatory upon persons or companies engaged in making loans of the type covered by the act to obtain licenses from the State. A specific effort will be made to halt usury and excess charges. Misleading advertising, deceptive contracts and unfair practices are also receiving attention. Failure on the part of unlicensed brokers to comply with the law or of licensed brokers to decline to conform to the law will be met with a demand on local authorities for immediate action.

The new Sunnyvale Air Base will be placed "in commission" by the end of this year. This was revealed recently by Commander E. L. Marshall, officer in charge of construction by the navy base designed to house the dirigible Akron, which recently visited there, and her sister ship, the Macon, now under construction. The huge hangar is now about 30 per cent completed, Commander Marshall said, and at the rate it is progressing will be ready for occupancy by January 1.

Another important unit of the base, the helium storage tanks and refining plant for supplying gas for the navy's airships, is also well under way and will be ready for operation in a few months. Excavations are now being started for five of the industrial buildings to house shops, repair depots and other necessary branches of the lighter than air service. The water supply, drainage and sewage systems of the base are nearing completion and construction has been started on the administration building, barracks for enlisted men and on the water tower. By the time the Macon is completed the Sunnyvale base will be ready to receive her. Present plans call for stationing the Macon on the Pacific Coast and leaving the Akron in the East.

OUR BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

"IT IS queer. It is very queer. It is the queerest thing I've ever known," muttered Paddy the Beaver to himself. "What under the sun are they covering themselves with mud for? That is what beats me. Mud is all right to build houses and dams with but why anyone should want to plaster it all over themselves is more than I can understand. My, but each of them is a sight!"

Of course you know who Paddy meant. He meant Farmer Brown's Boy, half hidden on the farther side of the pond, his face and neck covered with mud, and Buster Bear rolling in mud not very far from where Paddy was hiding with the Quack family in the rushes, only his head out of water. It was more than Paddy could understand, because Paddy never had been stung by Busy Bee, and so never had had a chance to find out that mud is of use in more ways than plastering houses and dams. He didn't know what Farmer Brown's Boy and Buster Bear knew, that it would take the smart out of stings. So he couldn't guess why they had covered themselves with mud, and he just itched to ask.

But he didn't do anything of the kind. He didn't even let them know that he knew they were there. He had a feeling that more interesting things might happen, and so he kept perfectly still right where he was. You see, Paddy had more than a suspicion that Buster Bear didn't know that Farmer Brown's Boy was anywhere about.

"Something is bound to happen when he finds it out," chuckled Paddy. You see, he and Buster Bear are old acquaintances, and he knows just how Buster feels toward all mankind. So he remained right where he was so as not to miss anything.

After Buster Bear had rolled and rolled in the mud until he was covered with it, until he was the worst looking bear that ever was seen, he stretched out on the edge of the pond. The cool wet mud drew out the pain of the stings which Busy Bee and her comrades had given him when he robbed their storehouse of honey, and in a little while Buster was fairly comfortable. He even dozed off for a little nap. All the time Farmer Brown's Boy sat perfectly still in his hiding place on the other side of the pond. He had seen Buster Bear cover himself with mud, and he knew why he did it. It was for the same reason that he had covered his own face and neck with mud.

"We've got a fellow feeling," he chuckled, but he took care it should be silent inside chuckle. It was the first chance he ever had had to watch Buster Bear, and he meant to make the most of it. The mud on his face and neck was beginning to dry and felt uncomfortable, but he didn't dare move to wash it off or put more on. He was afraid of frightening Buster Bear.

The Jolly Little Sunbeams were very bright and warm. In fact, they were hot. As Buster Bear dozed they dried the mud on his coat. By and by he awoke, and like Farmer Brown's boy he felt uncomfortable. He looked at his coat and a sheepish grin spread over his mud-covered face.

"My, but I am a sight!" he grumbled. "If this mud dries much more I'll never get it off until it wears off. The thing for me to do is to take a bath. The water will feel good anyway."

So Buster Bear got to his feet lazily and waded out in to the water. First, he washed his face until he had got off all the mud and the honey as well. Then he waded out until the water became so deep that he was forced to swim. Now Buster Bear likes an occasional swim. He enjoys it just as much as any small boy. He swam out almost to the middle of Paddy's pond. Just then a wandering Little Breeze danced out from the other shore and tickled Buster's nose. By this time all the honey had been washed away, and Buster's nose was ready to do its duty. Just out of habit he sniffed when that Merry Little Breeze tickled his nose. A suspicious look flashed into his eyes. He sniffed again. There was no doubt about it, that Merry Little Breeze was bringing him the dreaded man-smell! It was bringing him the smell of Farmer Brown's Boy!

Then He Waded Out Until the Water Became So Deep That He Was Forced to Swim.

Like a flash Buster turned and started for the shore. This was no place for him. He headed for the nearest place, and this happened to be the rushes in which Paddy the Beaver and the Quack family were hiding. Paddy saw him coming and dived to get out of the way. The Quack family couldn't get out of the way so easily. They started to swim but there wasn't time for this.

THE LORD'S EXPERIMENT

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

SEEMS like the Lord experimented
On lots of things that he invented.
Like man, for instance, there at first.
And man turned out about the worst.
You never hear of any movement
That says that roses need improvement,
But man himself is quite a mess,
Is still a failure more or less.

Here's what a mortal orght to be:
Strong as the wind, brave as the tree,
True as the stars, as firm as mountains,
Clean as pebbles, kind as fountains,
Gentle as grass and sweet as flow'rs,
As busy as the busy hours,
Yet man, a mortal or a nation,
Is still the failure of creation.

Worlds keep their orbits, never missed 'em,
Man hasn't any solar system,
And when I see him driving cars
I thank the Lord it isn't stars.
Spring hasn't missed a single season,
Or summer failed for any reason.
Time's worked a million years on man,
And we're about where time began.

FRENCH DISHES

Choux a la Creme.

Put a tablespoonful of butter in saucepan with a cupful of water, a teaspoonful of sugar, a piece of lemon peel and a little salt. Boil well together, stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour, and cook until thick. Allow this paste to cool, then work into it two eggs and sufficient milk to make a drop batter. Heat a kettle of lard or use a deep frying pan, drop the paste from a spoon into the hot fat, making lumps about the size of an egg. When slightly brown and well puffed remove and drain them. When cool scoop out a little from the top of each and fill with sweetened and flavored whipped cream. Jelly or preserves may be used in place of the cream if preferred.

Boeuf a la Mode.

Take the under part of a round steak, place in a deep earthen dish and pour over it spiced vinegar. Let the meat remain in this several hours, then lard it with strips of salt pork. Make incisions a few inches apart and stuff with seasoned bread crumbs. Use pepper, onion, thyme and marjoram. Bind the beef into shape and dredge with flour.

Cut two onions and one-half of a turnip and a small carrot and fry in a little fat. Brown the meat all over, place on a trivet in a pan and add boiling water, a bag of herbs, vegetables, and simmer until the meat is tender. Take out, remove the strings and herbs, place on a large hot platter, surround with the vegetables and potato balls and onions.

Salad Romaine.

Put crisp leaves of lettuce in a salad bowl that has been rubbed with a cut onion. Make the following dressing: Take one hard-cooked egg, mash it with a fork, adding salt, paprika, half a teaspoonful of mustard, a teaspoonful of hashed chives, the same of fresh tarragon, two tablespoonfuls of olive oil and one of vinegar. Toss well so that the romaine is well covered.

FREEDOM'S ANNIVERSARY

On July Fourth the American people will celebrate the one hundred and fifty-sixth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, that immortal document which was made effective through the blood of our illustrious forefathers, and which was intended to vouchsafe to citizens of this nation the right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

It is highly fitting that this historic date should be celebrated. It is also fitting that the principles enunciated in the Declaration should be reaffirmed, as they will, by orators throughout the land.

It might also be well to recall on this occasion the important privileges set forth in the first ten amendments to the Constitution, popularly known as the Bill of Rights.

But, without disparaging the accomplishments and progress whch has been made in these 156 years, it might be pertinent to inquire just what measure of liberty, freedom and independence is accorded to the average American citizen in this year 1932. Honest answers to this question will indicate just how enthusiastically we may indulge in celebrating the coming Fourth of July.

This year the nation will celebrate the Fourth of July with a three-day holiday. And it is sincerely hoped that all will enjoy this holiday to the utmost. This is a pretty good country in which we are living after all.

FIREWORKS TABOO IN NATIONAL FORESTS

Dry leaves and pine needles in the national forests do not go well with fireworks, so small boys who will spend their vacation in the mountains have to produce Fourth of July noise in some safer way, according to advice sent from the headquarters of the U. S. Forest Service.

"Firecrackers, skyrockets and other fireworks are classed in the regulations as a menace equal to lighted matches and burning tobacco," says Regional Forester S. B. Snow. "Many persons do not realize the danger to the tinder-dry litter on the forest floor and bring fireworks to public camps and summer home colonies where a forest fire would endanger many lives as well as destroy timber and watershed values. This is one of the regulations necessary for the good of the several million visitors who will go to the mountains for their Fourth of July vacation."

Just now a lot of politicians seem to be in danger of becoming bowlegged through trying to straddle the prohibition issue.

It is said that moonlight inspires the writing of poetry. And moonshine produces the urge to try to sing it.

SHE WANTED A MILLIONAIRE

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE

In the midst of all the political jockeying which is inseparable from a presidential campaign, the paramount issue which interests the American people as a whole is that of unemployment. When millions who are begging for a chance to work are denied an honorable means of earning a livelihood, all other problems seem insignificant.

The efforts of some politicians to place the blame of present conditions on this party or that, or on this official or that, are manifestly insincere and futile. No political party, no official or group of officials of the government, can be held responsible for the unhappy economic plight of this nation and of the world.

The best brains of America and other nations have long been devoted to an earnest effort to find a solution to the world's economic problems, but without success. Here and there a remedial action has given a small measure of relief. But, broadly speaking, the problem is still far from a solution.

It might be well, therefore, for the mass of our citizenship to discount the claims and counter claims of the politicians, and demand a facing of these pressing problems on the basis of reality rather than theory.

If prosperity is to be restored, it must be through the co-operation of all parties and all the people. This is not a partisan question.

PLAIN UNVARNISHED TRUTH

No city is immune from hard knocks. If they have a community spirit, well developed, hard knocks just spur them on to greater achievements.

The advertising columns of newspapers are breathing with bargains.

You are cheating yourself if you don't use every effort to make your city a busier city.

Speed maniacs should be taught that the time to be careful is before accidents—not after.

Every citizen should prove loyalty to his home city by services rendered.

The chap who carries around a sour face and never smiles is hurting no one but his own selfish self.

A whole lot of business men just love to be skinned by fake advertising schemes. They fall for every faker that comes along. In fact, some of them crowd each other to see who can get stung first.

Outside trade can enable a city to yield more revenue. It is also one of the best means of introducing the city itself to outsiders. It helps any possible misunderstanding that exists between one place and another.

The wise business man knows that the "magic key" to the city and rural trade is through the advertising pages of the local newspaper.

LOOKING FOR THE SILVER LINING

Those who at the beginning of the year turned their binoculars on the cloud of depression in the hope of discovering even a vestige of the silver lining, will have to put them away again, if the opinions expressed by many can be believed.

The present world trade depression is largely, though not wholly, psychological, and the problem is how best the world can be restored to a normal condition. Many of our politicians seem to think that it can economize itself into prosperity, while most of the rank and file think that we should pay some little attention to making better business for all.

In the meantime, it looks as though it is just a case of taking another hole in our belts and living in the hope that this economy wave will die a natural death. When it does, more attention will be turned to increasing business, and the making of more payrolls and markets so people will again be able to work, make a living and have something to spend.

Directly the government will benefit most when money is kept circulating. What would please the people most is to be able to make enough money to pay an income tax.

FIRE PREVENTION AND FIRE PROTECTION

As Alfred M. Hogston, Fire Marshal of Indiana, recently pointed out, fire losses and fire insurance rates go down or up together, over a period of time.

Every citizen is thus directly interested in every fire, not only in his community but in the state at large. He is interested in whether or not fire departments have first class, standard apparatus and an efficient personnel, and whether or not law enforcement officers are as zealous as they should be in the detection and prosecution of the arsonist. These matters are the public's business.

From the standpoint of the individual, he can do much to help by periodically examining the wiring, chimneys, roofs, and heating apparatus, and by making essential repairs at once, and by taking care in handling inflammable household liquids—those old friends of the fire menace.

This is the way to reduce fire losses. There is no greater civic duty than to encourage fire prevention and fire protection of property secured through individual interests backed by fire departments well manned and well equipped with standardized apparatus.

Prisoners in jail at Richmond, Missouri, who refused to leave explained as follows: "We didn't want to lose three meals a day, with a roof over our heads and no work to do."

An Oklahoma stenographer sues a man who daily promised to marry her for fifteen years, but didn't. Some girls are so impatient.

LEARN HOW TO WALK

An extremely important phase of the automobile accident problem is carelessness and ignorance on the part of the pedestrian. During 1931, pedestrian deaths reached 14,500 out of a toal of 34,400 deaths caused by automobiles, and the number of pedestrians injured non-fatally was 300,000. Consequently, if we are to make definite progress in reducing deaths and injuries, we must teach the public to walk.

In the case of the walker on the highway at night, the old rule of "keep to the right" may be suicidal—the left side is the right side. Wearing dark clothing increases the hazard because of its invisibility. Weather conditions are all important, and at the hour between light and darkness, when the pedestrian tends to blend into the background and figuratively disappear, he must be extremely careful, inasmuch as the driver may not be able to see him at all, and hence cannot take care of him.

Carelessness in crossing streets, stepping suddenly out from between parked cars, walking around the end of a street car into traffic, and thoughtlessness and abstraction regarding traffic lights, court disaster.

If pedestrians can learn "good walking practices," death and injuries from automobiles will be reduced.

WHAT CREATES PAYROLLS

Wisconsin has been receiving considerable publicity through the newspapers on the political and taxation policies which it has established and which are evidently discouraging normal industrial growth in that state.

A lot of people seem to be awakening to the fact that it takes industries, investments and payrolls to create and maintain employment, and that taxation and legislative policies which discourage normal activity, strike directly at the dinner bucket brigade and the taxpayer's pocketbook.

When a professor recently declared to a flapper that "the use of slang is deplorable," she acquiesced by saying, "You sure slobbered a bibful, sir."

Many farmers have found that the cow, sow and hen afford more effective relief that all the politicians.

COUNTIES OF THE U. S.

Some facts regarding the area, population and other statistics concerning counties in the United States may be of interest.

There are 3,072 counties in the forty-eight states, of which Texas has the greatest number, 254, and Delaware the smallest number, 3.

San Bernardino county, in California, is the largest, with an area of 20,175 square miles. New York county is the smallest, with an area of only 22 square miles. Bristol county, in Rhode Island, is the next smallest, with 24 square miles.

Citing another case of extremes, Armstrong conty, in South Dakota, with an area of 540 square miles, has no postoffice, while Allegheney county, in Pennsylvania, with 725 square miles, has 150 postoffices.

And speaking of postoffices, Leadville, Colo., is the highest, being 10,190 feet above sea level, while Calipatria, Calif., 175 feet below sea level, is the lowest.

North Carolina and Virginia have exactly 100 counties each. States having more than 100 counties are Illinois, 102; Kansas, 105; Missouri, 114; Kentucky, 120; Georgia, 161; Texas, 254.

One state, Louisiana, has no counties. But this does not mean that it has no political subdivisions as other states have. In Louisiana these subdivisions are called parishes, of which the state has 64.

CHAPTER I

It was springtime in the California Sierra. Never were skies bluer, never did the golden sun-flood steep the endless forest lands in richer life-giving glory. It was early June, and thus far only had the springtime advanced in its vernal progress upward through the timbered solitudes. Down in a hollow at the base of the sunny slope was a round alpine lake of the same deep, perfect blue as the sky, whose color it seemed not to reflect but to absorb.

While sitting with his back against a tawny cedar, the man had been drawn into the entity of the wilderness to which, obviously, he belonged. The well-worn, tall, laced boots were of brown leather, much scuffed, one in color with the soil dusting them. The khaki trousers gathered into the boot-tops, the soft flannel shirt, were the brown of the tree trunks; skin of hands and face and muscular throat were the bronze of ripe pine-cones and burnished pine-needles. And, in a landscape spotted with light and shadow, the head of black hair might have passed for a bit of such pitch-black shadow as a tuft of thick foliage casts upon the light-smitten ground.

He stood looking out across the ridges and so to the final bulwark against the sky still white with last December. He sought landmarks and measured distance, not in miles but in hours. Then he glanced briefly at the sun. The eyes which had been keen and alert filled suddenly with a shining brightness.

He picked up his hat and a small canvas roll. And yet again, with his hat in his hand, he stood motionless. Already he had marked out the way he planned to go, and still the nearer peaks with the sunshine upon them called to him. Slowly he drew back into the shadows to watch and not be seen.

For abruptly two figures had appeared upon the rocky head of the mountain across the lake. They had come up from the further side, and when he saw them first stood clear-cut against the sky. They might have been hunters, since each carried a rifle.

The two figures separated, one going along the crest of the ridge, the other climbing downward cautiously until he stood at the edge of the cliffs. He craned his body to look down as though seeking a way to the lake, straightened and stared for a long time toward the snow tops of the more distant altitudes. He turned and must have said something to his companion, who leaped down from a boulder and came to his side. The second man towered over him, head and shoulder.

They talked together, and yet the only sound to carry across the lake and meadow was the rush of air through innumerable tree-tops. The smaller man pointed, his arm outheld steadily. The other drew nearer, towering above him. He, too, pointed or seemed about to point. From a distance they looked like one man now.

It was with startling abruptness that the two figures were torn apart, each resolved again into an individual. One, the towering man, had drawn suddenly back; the other was falling. And yet the silence was unbroken.

There was never a cry to echo through the gorges from a horror-clutched throat. The falling man plunged straight down a dozen feet, struck against a ragged rock, writhed free, fell again a few feet, and began to roll over and over, plunging down the steep flank of the mountain.

The man who had watched from across the lake had not stirred. The big man on the cliffs came back slowly to the brink and crouched there, looking down, motionless so long that it was hard for the eye to be sure of him, to know if it were really a human being or a poised boulder squatting there.

Then he stood up, holding his rifle. He had done with looking down, now he pivoted slowly, looking off in all other directions. Presently he began climbing back up the few feet to the knife-like crest from which he had descended not five minutes ago. He paused there for hardly more than an instant and then went on, down the further side, out of sight.

The man who had seen all this from his own slope caught up his canvas roll again and hurried down toward the lake. For the first time he spoke aloud, saying:

"Swen Brodie. There's not another man in the mountains brute enough for that."

He hastened on, taking the shortest way, making nothing of the steepest slopes. He was going straight to the man who had fallen.

The sun was appreciably lower when the man carrying the canvas roll came at last under the cliffs. Before his keen eyes found the man they sought, he heard a voice calling faintly:

"That you, Brodie?"

"No. Brodie's gone."

The voice, though very weak, sharpened perceptibly:

"You, who are you? Not Brodie!"

"No. Not Brodie."

He dropped his roll and began working his way through the bushes. Presently he came to a spot from which he could see a figure propped up against a tree.

"Oh! It's you, is it, King?" The man against the tree did not seem overjoyed; there was a sullen note in his voice.

King came on, breaking his way through the brush.

"Hello," he said, a little taken back. "It's you, is it? I thought it would be—" But he did not say who. He came on and stood over the man on the ground, stooping for an instant to peer close into his face. "Hurt much?" he asked.

The answer was a long time coming. The face was bloodlessly gray. A tongue ran back and forth between the colorless lips.

"It's my leg," he said. "I don't know if it's broke. And I'm sort of bunged up." He looked up sharply. "Oh, I'll be all right," he grunted, "and don't you fool yourself."

"Did Brodie—"

The man began to tremble. "Yes, rot his soul." He began to curse, at first softly, then with a strained voice rising into a storm of windy incoherence. Suddenly he broke off, eyeing King with suspicion upon the surface of his shallow eyes. "What are you after?"

"I came to see if I could lend you a hand."

"You know I don't mean that. What are you after, here in the mountains?"

King grew angry and burst out bluntly:

"The devil take you, Andy Parker. I wanted to help you. If you don't take my interference kindly, I'll be on my way."

The Man Against the Tree Did Not Seem Overjoyed.

He turned to be off. If the fellow was able to shift for himself, it suited King well enough. But Parker called to him, and in an altered voice, a whine running through the words.

"Hold on, King. I'm hung up here for the night, anyhow. And I ain't got a bite of grub, and already I'm burning up with thirst. Get me a drink, will you?"

King found where a trickle of clear cold water ran in a narrow rivulet, and presently returned to the injured man with a brimming cup. Parker drank thirstily, and sank back with a long sigh.

"The thing's unlucky, you know, King," he said queerly.

"Is it?" said King coolly. It was like him not to pretend that he did not know to what Andy Parker's thoughts had flown.

Parker jerked his head up and muttered:

"There's been the devil's luck on it for more'n sixty years and maybe a thousand years before that! Oh, you know!" He paused and then spat out venomously: "Oh, it'll get Swen Brodie and it'll get you, too, Mark King. You'll see."

"Another drink before I go?" demanded King.

"I got a terrible headache," Parker said. "Aching and singing and sort of dizzy."

King went for more water, this time filling his one cook pot. When he returned Parker was trying to stand. He swayed and fell. King, standing over him, thought at first he was dead, so white and still was he. But Parker had only fainted. And, despite all that Mark King could do, the sunset glow had gone and the first star was shining before Andy Parker stirred.

His first call was for water. Thereafter he was never coherent again, though for the most part he babbled like a noisy brook. He spoke of Swen Brodie and old Loony Honeycutt and Gus Ingle all in one breath, and King knew that Gus Ingle was sixty years dead; he dwelt hectically on the "luck of the unlucky Seven." And when, far on in the night, he at length grew silent and King went to peer into his face by the light of his camp-fire, Andy Parker was dead.

Mark King made the grave in the dawn. He put his own blanket down, laid the quiet figure gently upon it, bringing the ends over to cover him. He marked the spot with a pile of rocks; he blazed the two trees. It was all that he could do; far more than Andy Parker would have done for him or for any other man.

The sun was rising when he made his way to the top of the ridge and came to stand where he had seen Parker and Swen Brodie side by side. Just where had Brodie gone? He wondered. The answer came before the question could have been put into words. He saw the flare of a camp fire shining bright through the dark of a low-lying flat two miles or more from his vantage point. Brodie would be cooking his breakfast now.

After that King moved along the ridge steadily and swiftly like a man with a definite objective who did not care to be spied on. In twenty minutes he came to the disintegrating ruin of a cabin. The walls had disappeared long ago, save for two or three rotting logs, but a small rectangle of slightly raised ground indicated how they had extended.

Here he made his breakfast from what was ready cooked in his pack, dispensing with the fire, which would inevitably tell Brodie of his presence.

King's first interest was centered on the ground under foot. He went back and forth and about the ruin of the cabin several times seeking any sign that would tell him if Brodie and Andy Parker had been here before him. But there were no tracks in the softer soil, no trodden down grass. It was very likely that no foot had come here since King's own last October. A look of satisfaction shone for an instant in his eyes.

He made sure that he had left no sign of his visit here, not so much as a fallen crust of bread, caught up his pack and found the familiar way down the cliffs, striking off toward the higher mountains and the high pass through which he would travel tonight.

To have followed the pace which King set that day would have broken the heart of any but a seasoned mountaineer. At six o'clock he made a fire in a bleak windy pass, surrounded by a glimmering ghostly waste. He rested by his fire with his canvas drawn up about his shoulders, smoked his pipe, remade his pack, and went on.

By the time he got down to the timber line the moon was up. He left the country of Five Lakes well to his left, heading tenaciously toward the tiny lakelet which, so far as he knew, had been nameless until his old friend Ben Gaynor had built a summer home there two years ago and had christened the pond among the trees. Lake Gloria! Though he had never so much as set his eyes on either Gloria or her mother, King had his own opinion of both of them. Nor did he in the least realize that that opinion was based rather less on actual knowledge than molded by his own peculiar form of jealousy, that jealousy which one time-tried friend feels when the other allows love of women to occupy a higher place than friendship.

And at nine o'clock next morning he stood on the bench of a timbered slope whence he got his first glimpse of Lake Gloria and of the rambling log house which Ben Gaynor had been prevailed on to build here in the wild, a dozen miles from the Lake Tahoe road.

An hour later he came to the grove of sugar pines back of the house. He saw a number of persons coming out of the house, a dozen or more, pouring out brightly, as gay as butterflies, men and women. He wanted to see Gaynor, not a lot of Gaynor's San Francisco guests. No, not Gaynor's; rather the friends of Gaynor's womenfolk. It was King's hope that they were going down toward the lake; thus he would avoid meeting them.

He stood very still where he was, unseen as he leaned against a light-and-shadow-dappled pine. A girl broke away from the knot of summer-clad figures, ran a few steps down the path toward the lake, poised gracefully, executed a stagy little pose with head back and arms outflung as though in an ecstacy of delight that the world was so fair. Then, as in sheer youth, she yielded her young body up to an extravagant dance, whirling away as light as thistle-down across the meadow. The guests went trooping gaily after her. King seized his chance and went swiftly toward the house.

Ben Gaynor had seen him through a window and met him at the door. Their hands met in the way of old friendship, gripping hard.

"My wife has been saying for years that you're a myth," said Gaynor, the gleam in his eyes as youthful as it had ever been; "that you are no more flesh and blood than the unicorn or the dodo bird. Today I'll show her."

"In the meantime we can talk," said King. "I've got something to tell you, Ben."

Gaynor led the way through a room where were piano and victrola and from the floor of which the rugs were still rolled; through a dining room and into what was at once a small library and Gaynor's study. A chair pulled forward, a box of cigars offered, and the two friends took stock in each other's eyes of what the last year had done for each.

"You look more fit than ever, Mark—and younger."

King wanted to say the same thing of his friend but the words did not come. They had been friends together since King could remember, since Ben had big-brothered him, carried him on his back, taught him to swim and shoot. Then one year while King was off at school his friend took unto himself a wife. King did not so much as know of the event until Gaynor, after a month of honeymooning, remembered to drop him a brief note. King was hurt and grew angry and resentful with all of the unreason of a boy. He went off to Alaska without a word to Gaynor.

With the passage of time the friends had again grown intimate, had been partners in more than one deal, and the youthful relationship had been cemented by the years. But it had happened, seemingly purely through chance although King knew better, that he had never met Gaynor's wife or daughter.

. . . What King said in answer to his friend's approval was by way of a bantering:

"Miracles do happen! Here's Ben Gaynor playing he's a bird of paradise. Or emulating Beau Brummel. Which is it, Ben? And whence the fine idea?"

LOUISIANA

Pickaninny Jazz Orchestra in New Orleans.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

LOUISIANA has dedicated her new domeless capitol building, a gigantic pile of limestone which rises 33 stories above the streets of Baton Rouge.

Louisiana boasts many modern buildings in her bustling cities, but the fame of the state is not confined to architecture. It is more widely known for its equitable climate, its tranquil scenic beauty, and a hospitality which makes the manifold claims of her citizens as to the state's point of excellence seem a bare recital of obvious facts.

It is one of America's leading fur-producing regions, and the source of staggering quantities of shrimps and strawberries, oysters and oranges, sugar and salt, terrapins and fiery tabasco, rice and red snappers, figs and frog's legs, waterfowl and muskrats, timber and turpentine, cucumbers and cattle, sulphur and Spanish moss. Oil and gas flow from its seemingly inexhaustible subterranean chambers.

It boasts the second largest port in the United States—New Orleans—through which pass vast cargoes of foreign commodities, including 23,000,000 bunches of bananas each year, coffee for every third cup consumed in the United States, and mahogany and sisal, to our markets; while all the varied products of farm and factory originating in the lower Mississippi valley begin their sea journey from the city's docks.

Romance of New Orleans.

Many writers agree that New Orleans is one of only three great "story cities" of America. And New Orleans is part and parcel of Louisiana. One needs only to go back to the adventurous times of those daring French pioneers, La Salle, Bienville and Iberville; to the days of those picturesque and honored pirates, the Lafitte Brothers and Dominique You; to quadroon balls, voodoo rites, suicide and dueling oaks, or even to the fantastic revels of this year's Mardi Gras, to find romance here.

Today in Louisiana the visitor encounters romance as readily in any one of the half score 15-to-20-story office buildings of New Orleans as he did formerly in the city's "haunted houses," absinthe bars, or charming patios rich in association with the names of Lafayette, Louis Philippe, Adelina Patti Jenny Lind, Audubon, Paul Morphy and Lafcadio Hearn.

For decades Louisiana's great sugar mills, set down in the midst of billows of green cane extending to the horizon, had unfailingly ground out wealth to the state's sugar barons. Three hundred thousand tons of sugar was not an unusual year's yield from the fecund black soil. But the major romance of Louisiana is to be found not in its cane fields. The progenitor of those fields, and of the entire state, is the Father of Waters.

With its long, tenuous fingers of silt thrust far out into the Gulf of Mexico, the "bird's-foot" delta of the Mississippi is unlike that of any other major river on the globe. Between its fingers or claws are shallow, open bays, and the banks confining the great streams into which the river divides at Head of Passes, 95 miles below New Orleans, are in some places only a few feet in width.

In colonial times, when 10 or 12 feet of water provided ample depth for all caravels of commerce, navigation of the main passes of the Mississippi presented no difficulties, but with the increase in the tonnage and draft of vessels the shallow finger channels were a bar to progress and prosperity.

Making the Delta Navigable.

Ninety years ago the federal government made the first appropriation for deepening these natural channels, and in the course of the next 40 years it succeeded, by means of crude dredging processes, in increasing the depth to from 12 to 20 feet. But when it is recalled that in time of flood the Mississippi brings down for deposit at its mouth more than 2,000,000 tons of sand a day, one can realize that this was a costly and disheartening battle.

By 1870 vessels had so increased in size and draft that a deeper channel became a crying necessity. A board of eminent engineers, appointed to find a solution of the problem, made exhaustive studies of many important harbor entrances, including the mouths of the Danube, which had been successfully improved by means of contracting jetties similar to those now in use on the Mississippi river. The board finally reported that the use of jetties would be too costly for the improvement of the mouths of the Mississippi and recommended the construction of a ship canal from Fort St. Philip (opposite Fort Jackson) to the Gulf.

At this juncture there appeared before congress an engineering genius who persuaded that body to defer for the time being the digging of the ship canal and permit him, on a basis of "no cure, no pay," to attempt to provide and maintain a deep-water channel in his own way.

But when congress finally accepted this "can't loose" proposition of James B. Eads, who had just completed the world-famous steel-arch bridge over the Mississippi at St. Louis, the engineer was not permitted to use the Southwest Pass for his experiment, as he had specified. This was the best of the three main passes, and the government was taking no chances with Mr. Eads and his chimerical proposition! If he wanted to lose his own money, he could sink it in South Pass without endangering the then best channel.

The Eads contract called not only for a channel 26 feet deep and 200 feet wide at the bottom, but for maintaining that depth for 20 years.

With tremendous energy and rare organizing ability, the engineer set to work, and in less than five years his jetties and his dredges had done the work. And, furthermore, he maintained the depth for 20 years, that period expiring in 1901. The main responsibility of the engineers today, so far as the mouths of the Mississippi are concerned, is to prevent the river from creating new passes.

Furs From the Marshlands.

It is not only the Mississippi which makes Louisiana "water-minded." The state is threaded and meshed with bayous, lakes and streams, giving it more than 4,790 miles of navigable waters—a total which exceeds by two for one its nearest competitor in the Union, Arkansas.

Naturally, much of the bordering land in the vast delta region is marsh area; but let no casual observer be deceived into imagining that "marsh" in Louisiana means waste or unproductive land. It is these tens of thousands of grass-covered acres which have given the state the unique distinction of being the largest fur-producing commonwealth in the Union. As a matter of fact, not only does Louisiana lead all other states both in the value of its fur crop and in the number of pelts marketed, but last year, and for several years past, it has produced more pelts than the entire Dominion of Canada, generally recognized as one of the world's most important fur-producing countries.

The muskrat is the fur citizen mainstay of the state's pelt wealth. More than 5,000,000 of him were taken during the open season from November 20 to February 5, 1928-29. What with muskrats, opossums, raccoons, minks, skunks, otters, wild cats and foxes, the trappers' sales last year aggregated $8,500,000—exceeding by a third the total value of Alaska's production of gold and silver for the same period.

The Evangeline Country.

Journeying by a series of autobus stages from New Orleans to Lake Charles, in the southwest corner of the state, one passes through a section of Louisiana which is redolent of romance. Here lies the Evangeline country, with its many pleasing, if seldom substantiated, stories identifying particular spots with various episodes in the Longfellow epic. St. Martinville, one of the oldest towns in Louisiana, is the center of the Evangeline cult, with its Evangeline oak and its grave of the woman from whom the poet is supposed to have drawn his picture of the Acadian heroine.

At New Iberia are Louisiana's famous salt mines. On an open-platform elevator one descends for 540 feet in Stygian darkness to the present floor of this salt mine. Its vast galleries are sixty feet in height, half again as wide in some places, and their winding lengths exceeds two miles. With electric drills, miners bore into the salt rock, set off their charges of dynamite, and blow out great blocks of pure crystal salt, which is scooped up in mechanical shovels and loaded on cars similar to those used in coal mines.

With a production of some 19,000,000 bushels of rice a year, Louisiana not only produces more of the cereal than any other state in the Union, but it has one-half of the entire United States rice acreage.

Beth's Garden

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service)

OF COURSE the old Mordaunt place had a garden. Beth remembered coming there years ago with her mother, before Uncle Jaffrey died. The flowers were so marvelous and the gardens so weedless that they appeared almost unnatural to the young girl and her mother, who lived in a small cottage nearby.

When Uncle Jaffrey died, Beth and her mother found that his beautiful property had been left to them, but there was not money enough to keep it going. Every year Mrs. Mordaunt divided the tiny income so that there was just enough to live on carefully, and nothing was ever left for the garden. People whispered that there must have been more money, for Uncle Jaffrey was very rich, and grew quite miserly in the last year of his life, and they declared that somewhere about the old place he had hidden either one large sum or many smaller ones.

One day a good looking man came to the door. Mrs. Mordaunt met him and greeted him pleasantly.

"Mr. Smith, who said he was your lawyer, suggested that I come and see you about clearing up your garden and lawns in return for my board," he told her frankly. "I had pneumonia in the late winter and I really need light outdoor work to keep me outside—regular farm work is too vigorous just now—I am studying medicine at Blank university, and I cannot afford to spend money for a vacation." Then his pleasant voice grew wistful as he scanned the delightful old neglected garden. "It would be a wonderful opportunity for me," he added, "but you may have other plans."

Mrs. Mordaunt did not hesitate. "If Mr. Smith sent you here, you are certainly welcome—my daughter and I were just discussing the needs of the garden." Then she introduced Bruce Wayne to Beth and went to the house to select a room for him.

"Mother," said Beth, one August morning, "everything is so beautiful—do come out and witness the cleaning out of the large fountain. Bruce is going to do that next."

Bruce whipped off his old hat and grinned affectionately at the woman who had been so kind to him for several months. He had brought a deep wicker chair from the front veranda, and soon Mrs. Mordaunt was comfortably settled and watching these two young people who worked together so harmoniously. She was wondering whether her daughter, Beth, cared at all for the embryo doctor, whose heart was in his fine eyes, whenever he glanced at the lovely girl. There was no doubt that Bruce Wayne had lost his heart to her gentle Beth, and sighed a little as they worked so happily together, because she was thinking about the lack of money and the years they would have to wait.

Bruce had a large hammer and was prying off the fitted boards of the "tent-like" protection. "Hurrah," he shouted when the last section had been removed and the rusty, stained proportions of the fountain were revealed.

"Are you going to paint the fountain, Bruce?" asked Beth's mother.

"It should be painted, don't you think, Mrs. Mordaunt?" And then, bending over the deep basin he lifted out a dry and rusty steel box. "Why, what the dickens do you suppose this can be?" he queried. "Buried treasure?" He set it at Mrs. Mordaunt's feet.

"Oh, Bruce, smash it open," begged Beth. "Perhaps that is where poor Uncle Mordaunt hid his money!"

A few blows of the stout hammer opened the rusty box. Inside of that was a huge rubber pocket which held the missing wealth of Uncle Mordaunt. They sent Bruce for Mr. Smith, and during his absence, Beth confessed to her mother that she and Bruce loved each other and that he had asked her to marry him. "And I want to, mother darling," sobbed the girl, "even if we are quite poor at first! You understand, don't you?"

Mrs. Mordaunt nodded happily, and then the two men appeared and Mr. Smith checked up the contents of the old box. "The missing securities," he said. "You see, there was about a hundred thousand missing—and here it is!"

Bruce Wayne looked very glum. After the lawyer had left, Beth's mother said to him:

"Well, Bruce, aren't you happy over our good luck?"

"Oh, yes, Mrs. Mordaunt—of course. Only—you see—well, I'm so poor—and Beth's a rich girl now."

"But, Bruce," said Mrs. Mordaunt, smiling understandingly, "the money's really part yours—you found it." And she went off to the house.

Bruce turned stammeringly to Beth.

"Don't you see, dear," she said, "if you hadn't come into my garden we might never have found that money? So it is part yours—it's ours."

And so when Bruce left her garden Beth had promised to wait for him to finish his training, and he had promised to start out his professional and married career in the old Mordaunt home.

One-Sided Arguments

Mrs. Pecke—We have been married a year now and we never have quarreled. If a difference of opinion arises and I am right, Henry gives in immediately.

Mrs. Becke—And if he is right?

Mrs. Pecke—Oh, that hasn't happened yet.

U. S. ARMY CAMELS

Few persons know that once the United States Army employed camels as a means of transportation in the Southewest. The story of the experiment is interesting.

With a view to overcoming the difficulties of traversing the great American desert before there were any transcontinental railroads or highways, 75 camels were brought from Egypt and Asia Minor in 1856 by the War Department, while Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War.

The camels performed satisfactorily, but the Army "mule skinners" did not like the beasts, besides they frightened the Army horses and mules into a stampede on slight provocation. Before the experiment had progressed very far the Civil War broke out and the project was abandoned, some of the animals being sold to circuses while others were turned loose. Some of these, grown wild, were seen in Arizona as late as 1909, and some believe that a herd still exists in the uninhabited wastes of that region.

THIS WILL BE GOOD NEWS TO THE DUCK HUNTER

While the wild duck question has become a matter of international concern, California seems to be favored by this favorite sport bird this year. Reports submitted to the State Fish and Game Commission relative to nesting and hatching on the four state owned water-fowl refuges indicate the ducklings reared this season will exceed the output of any former year on the refuges.

At Los Banos, Gray Lodge at Gridley, and Joice Island near Suisun the mallards, various varieties of teal, sprig and spoonbills have utilized every desirable nesting place, and for the past few days the young birds have appeared each sundown in increasing numbers.

At the Imperial refuge on the Salton Sea, teal and tree ducks forsook their usual migratory tactics and settled down for the nesting season on the Colorado desert and the hatch has been heavy.

Every care is being given the ducks hatched on these areas, that they may be kept for further propagation, and encouraged to remain in this state instead of making their flight to more commonly used districts for nesting.

Improved water conditions in this state, and the drying up or draining of large areas in other states on the coast are among the reasons given for the increased production of ducks this year.

TURNING POINTS

Most persons of middle age and beyond may look upon apparently trivial occurrences which seem to have changed the entire course of their lives. A chance meeting, a fortuitous remark, a casual letter, or even an accident, may mark a turning point in one's course.

Such ordinarily unimportant events which turn out to be far reaching in their consequences most often have to do with matrimony. But in business and other relations of life these minor happenings also frequently have a weighty influence.

It is related of Disraeli, the Jewish boy who became one of England's great prime ministers, that his turning point came through a fist fight at school, as a consequence of which he changed his place of residence and fell in with friends who aided him in getting started on his brilliant career. Numberless similar instances may be found in biographies of the great and near-great, in which chance or small happenings led to fame and fortune.

Sometimes, too, they lead in the opposite direction, as in the case of Napoleon, who is said to have lost the battle of Waterloo, which changed the whole history of Europe, because it rained just before the battle, causing his cannon to be mired in the mud.

Thus, while carefully planned efforts count most, a great deal often depends on whether one gets the lucky or unlucky "breaks" in the game of life.

"WHISTLING IN THE DARK" SCHEDULED FOR THE GEARY

One of the outstanding comedy hits of the present New York season, "Whistling in the Dark," will be presented by Belasco and Curran, in association with Alexander McKaig, at the Geary Theatre, beginning next Monday evening, July 4. The play comes here with the entire New York cast and production, complete.

In the stellar role will appear Ernest Truex, a New York favorite who has not been seen in California in years and who is one of America's finest and most artistic comedians.

"Whistling in the Dark," the work of Edward Childs Carpenter and Laurence Gross, seems to owe its popularity to a highly ingenious and original story. It furnishes an evening's entertainment in which people no longer mysteriously disappear while trap doors and sliding panels open and close to engulf them. Thrills and laughs are there in equal quantity, but adventure—and there is plenty of that in it—is treated with intelligence and logic.

The central figure, played by tiny Truex, is Wallace Porter, writer of best-sellers in detective fiction, who accidentally gets into the clutches of an underworld gang. Porter, a mild little runt, imbibes a bit too freely and boasts that he can construct a perfect crime. He and his fiancee are held captive and ordered to get to work. The complications that ensue, the murder itself and the efforts of the frightened novelist to escape are hilarious.

Although it all sounds pretty grim, the play is actually a comedy, and remains comic in is grisliest moments. So ingenious is the plot and so mirth-provoking its development that S. S. Van Dine, probably the most famous of all living detective story writers, said that he wished he had thought of the idea first.

"Whistling in the Dark," after a brief tour eastward, will go to London, where Mr. Truex is one of the most popular comedy stars.

Some Good Advice For a Safe Fourth of July

This year most of the nation will celebrate the Fourth of July with a three-day holiday. Such a long period for recreation is awaited eagerly by us all. Yet its unusual length doubles the hazards and danger to which we shall be exposed.

Independence day is known as the worst accident day of the year. This year may break the tragic record unless everybody guards himself closely and observes all safety rules. A list of "dont's," all excellent advice, has been prepared by the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety underwriters and follows:

If you drive your car—drive safely.

Don't drive recklessly—it's a long holiday and there's plenty of time.

Don't take out your car unless it is in first class condition.

Don't drive on the wrong side of the road—keep to the right.

Don't drive too long without resting—mental lapses due to fatigue cause accidents.

Don't pass other cars unless you have a clear view ahead; don't cut in and out of traffic lines; don't pass or fail to slow down at intersections.

If you are swimming—swim safely.

Don't attempt marathon races by swimming too long or too far.

Don't venture out into too deep water if you're not a strong swimmer.

Don't swim away from the crowd. "In unity there is strength."

Don't indulge in ducking others or in frightening weak swimmers and children.

Don't lie too long in the sun—sun poisoning is injurious and can be fatal.

If you celebrate with fireworks—celebrate safely.

Don't hold lighted firecrackers in your hand or throw them close to others.

Don't explode firecrackers near combustible materials.

Don't celebrate with guns loaded with real cartridges or shot; firecrackers and toy pisols are dangerous enough.

Don't fail to treat injuries, even the minor ones, immediately and intelligently. Tetanus poisoning works slowly but surely.

Don't get too close to a display of fireworks—premature explosions occur.

HINDERING PROGRESS

While the distressing economical conditions which prevail are due to a number of causes, there can be no doubt that restrictive laws which hamper business and industry have been an important factor in the situation.

An instance of how unwise legislation operates to retard progress is given by Wright A. Patterson, veteran editor, in a recent issue of The Publishers' Auxiliary, a trade publication for newspaper men. Mr. Patterson discusses the effects of laws enacted in Oklahoma and Kansas which prohibit utility companies from selling electric and gas appliances, and the agitation for similar laws in other states. He says:

"The enactment of such a law in any state means slowing up of the installation of these modern comfort and convenience producing appliances in the home; it means depriving the people of the community of securing them on easy payment terms and at the lowest possible cost; it means fewer people employed in the community and in the factories of the nation, and in the end it does more harm than good to the merchants of a community."

It might be added that such laws tend to prevent the extension of electric service to the farms of the country, a movement which has made great progress in recent years owing to the enterprise of the utility companies in supplying the necessary appliances on most favorable terms.

HE'S THE WHOLE WORKS

An exchange prints a little story, clipped from an unknown source, which is very good and perhaps very old. Anyway it's worth repeating.

It concerns an Omaha jobbing house and a customer merchant in a small Iowa town. A shipment of goods received by the customer was rejected as unsatisfactory.

The jobber prepared to institute suit for collection, and wrote to the railroad agent at the village for information about the arrival of the merchandise; to the president of the bank for information concerning the financial standing of their customer; to the mayor of the city asking him to recommend a good lawyer to handle their case; and to the merchant himself, threatening suit, if he did not make payment at once.

All the desired information came in a single letter, as follows:

"I received your letter telling me I had better pay up.

"I am railroad agent here and received the letter you wrote the agent.

"I am president and sole owner of the local bank and can assure you of my financial standing.

"As the mayor of the city, I hesitate to refer you to a lawyer, since I am the only member of the bar in this vicinity.

"If I were not the pastor of the only church here, I would tell you to go to hell!"

Harry Lauder has 400 canes. And fortunately for the eminent Scot's peace of mind there is no cost for upkeep.

COURAGE AND FAITH NEEDED AT THIS TIME

"California's further prosperity depends upon the prosperity of farm lands and the courage and faith of the people," declared Bert B. Meek, president of California Lands, Inc., former director of Public Works for the State of California, in an address on the Bank of America's "Back to Good Times" program.

Meek emphasized the fact that agriculture is today California's basic industry and will remain such during the life time of the present generation. He therefore advised his listeners to keep their eyes on the farms of this state for the first sign of returning prosperity.

Meek, in his address, called attention to the fact that there had been less shrinkage in agricultural values than in any other business or security in the present depression. He further pointed out that while there are fewer great fortunes among the farmers than among other classes of the state's population, the purchasing power of the farmer, as indicated by the United States census reports, is above that of the average city and suburban resident.

In every depression, he said, there has developed a movement from the city to the farm, and this one is following the same course.

Meek, who referred to the fact he is a member of the third generation of a farming family, declared that the "hayseed" farmer is rapidly disappearing, due to the automobile, good roads and improved farming methods. Farming has reached the point, due to competition, where success goes to the man who keeps up to date on all new developments and adapts them to his own business.

He declared that those farmers who are taking advantage of present day costs, to acquire farm land, as well as those who have adjusted to the new conditions, are laying the foundation for a substantial fortune in the future. Just as many present day fortunes have been based upon the faith of California pioneers in the soundness of the land.

Aluminum is now being used for desks, chairs and other office furnishings.

"REUNION IN VIENNA" COMING TO THE CURRAN ON JULY 4

Messrs. Belasco and Curran, in association with the New York Theatre Guild, will present Robert E. Sherwood's "Reunion in Vienna," the greatest comedy the Guild has ever produced, at the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, for a brief run, beginning Monday, July 4.

The fascinating comedienne, Ina Claire, will be the stellar player, and from reports of her performance in the leading role, an evening of rare artistry may be expected. She will be assisted by the famous musical star, Donald Brian, Ethel Griffies, William Stack and a cast of thirty players.

"Reunion in Vienna" is now in its ninth month at the Guild Theatre, New York, where it has been drawing capacity audiences since it opened, and where it is likely to remain for another year. It will be seen only in San Francisco and Los Angeles; no other place on the Coast.

The play, from the pen of Robert E. Sherwood, the author of "The Road to Rome," and other successful plays, is reported to be the gayest and the smartest comedy that has been seen on Broadway in years. The scenes are laid in Vienna at the present time and the characters are representative of life in that once gay, but now mouldering capital. Some of the members of the former nobility hold a reunion in an old palace, whose walls speak volumes of former glories. To this reunion, Prince Rudolph von Hapsburg steals in from exile. His former sweetheart, Elena, who after the overthrow of the monarchy and the banishment of her lover, found a wedding-ring and a home with Professor Anton Krug, a renowned psychologist. Herr Krug learns of the coming reunion and urges Elena to attend it, believing that time has wrought such changes in the prince that she will be cured of the affection he knows she still has for Rudolph. Elena's intuition warns her that it will be more dangerous, and it proves correct, than her husband's theories. When the pair meet the old flame is kindled anew. The prince grows ardent and Elena is compelled to fly to her husband's arms for protection. The scenes that follow are the liveliest and merriest that have been seen in any comedy for years. The play is one scream of laughter from that point to the finish.

Having a tender passion, a young man took his girl some expensive flowers.

"How kind of you," said the girl, "to bring me these lovely flowers! They're so beautiful and fresh. I think there is some dew on them yet."

"Yes," said the young man in great embarassment, "Er, there is, but I'm going to pay it off tomorrow."
